COMPLAINS OF TREATMENT

WILLIAM STIFFLER, HELD AS MATERIAL WITNESS IN NAPANEE MURDER CASE

The Watertown N. Y. Standard of Thursday has the following:

"William C. Stiffler, of Napanee, Ontario, a returned Canadian soldier, was in the city Wednesday and issued a statement on his recent deportation from Canada. Stiffler claims unfair treatment. He left with his wife on Wednesday night for Chicago and Marion, Ohio.

"Stiffler, whose home is in Marion, went to Canada in 1915, and enlisted in the 19th draft, C. Company, R.C.H.A., of Kingston, and was at Barrifield. A month after he enlisted he was in a runaway and was disabled. He was discharged. He shortly after re-enlisted, his previous discharge was discovered and he was dropped. He then went to Windsor, Ontario, in December of 1916, re-enlisted once more and again it was found that he had been discharged previously. He was dropped. He had in the meantime married in Canada. He was ordered deported and placed under guard to thirty days in jail. Before his jail sentence was up he was released. He went to Kingston where he says an immigration officer told him he would aid him to get another chance. He waited until March 1918, for his chance, enlisted again and went overseas in June of that year. He returned as an invalid in May, 1919. He spent some time in the South and then returned to Canada.

"On August 28th, 1921, Constable R. A. Beard, of Napanee, Ontario, was killed. The morning after, while in Napanee, Stiffler found a 32 calibre bullet on the street and turned it over to the chief of police. Shortly after he was taken into custody and held pending an investigation. He had no connection with the murder. He was held a week and bailed out, but was remanded. In the meantime immigration officers got to work and started steps to deport him. He blames his troubles to one immigration officer and says he tried to give the officer punishment in the jail at Napanee but was prevented. He asked to be deported to Detroit Mich.

"He was held in jail six weeks and then sent with his wife and child out by way of Cape Vincent. He was aided there by Rev. Mr. Pratt and in Watertown by Ensign Comfort and Major of the Salvation Army. He was stranded and penniless here, he declared. He left for Marion, O., with his family last night. He vows that he will get justice from the immigration officer who he claims caused his trouble."

THE FIRST OF THE CHAUTAUQUA LYCEUM ENTERTAINMENTS

WILL BE HELD ON TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 1st.

THE DEL MAR LADIES' QUARTETTE—VOCALISTS AND INSTRUMENTALISTS

The Del Mars are singing maids primarily. A good ladies quartette is a rarity, indeed, and those who have had the fortunate combination of four well trained voices, will do well to hear the Del Mar programme.

The vocal work is but a part, however, of the Del Mar's varied programme. They play VERY well any delightful combination such as 'cello, violin, piano and cornet, which adds to the popularity of their offerings.

Then there are costumed sketches, the readings, and the humorous skits in which one and all take part. There are also the musical monologues — cleverly given. Throughout their programme runs a vein of good, clean, wholesome fun, that rounds out a highly enjoyable and profitable evening. Admission, 75c. and war tax. Season tickets, $2.00, and 20c. war tax.

LENNOX AND ADDINGTON TEACHERS' INSTITUTE

The teachers of Lennox and Addington held their annual meeting in the Napanee Collegiate Institute on October 6th and 7th, 1921.

Thursday morning the President, Mr. Arklay, M.A., N.C.I., called the meeting to order and introduced Rev. Mr. Terrill, who kindly conducted the opening exercises which consisted of a very excellent address on "Service," and prayer.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and accepted.

A communication from Mr. Chas. G. Fraser re a grant of $5 to O.E.A. was then read, and it was later agreed to send the grant.

Two communications from "The School," and "The Canadian Teacher" were read and the terms explained, and Mr. Trenouth was appointed to take subscriptions.

Mr. McLean stated that no communication concerning Dental Inspection had been received from the department.

The treasurer's report was read and Misses Sills and Hawley appointed auditors. *They found the the report correct.

The following were chosen as members of the Nominating Committee: the Inspector, the President, Mr. Trenouth, and Misses Mitchell, Grundy and Dennes.

Mr. W. J. Trenouth, delegate to O.E.A., gave a very interesting and satisfying report of the work of the Easter meeting. Mr. Trenouth confined his address to the programme, giving a short summary of the most important addresses, and it seemed as if he had purposely noted the points most helpful to the teachers. A few were as follows:

1. We need more play in P.S.; there is too much mental training.

2. There is a limit to mental and physical strength; stop before fatigue sets in.

3. Take a joy and pride in living; don't teach unless from a love of it.

4. A teacher of the right stamp cannot be turned down.

5. Schools should give to pupils minds trained to enjoy the best things.

6. Local authorities should provide public play places, so that the public may not be entirely dependant for amusement upon movies and theatres, 90 per cent. of which are a stain on family life.

7. Kindling souls is the biggest thing a teacher can do.

8. No nation can rise higher than the quality of its people. Our duty is to improve the quality of the child.

9. Teachers should be filled with the spirit of service. Life does not consist in living for self alone.

Mr. McLean congratulated Mr. Trenouth on his very able report, from which the teacher would derive a great deal of help and pleasure, and which just went to show the benefit to be derived from having a delegate at O.E.A.

A very pleasing addition to the afternoon session consisted of two beautiful instrumental solos by Miss M. Kouber and Miss C. Ham.

In the President's address Mr. McLean spoke on educational waste, strongly condemning some old methods in marking, such as dictation of notes by the teacher. The duty of the teacher is to train pupils to self reliance and to promote cultured minds, not to make receptables of children's minds to store up facts dug up by others. The aim of the teacher should be to develop in the pupil the power to think and reason for himself.

In the Inspector's address Mr. Corkill again urged upon the teachers the importance of filling out complete reports. Some teachers leave several items a blank, thereby necessitating considerable work on his part, often the blank has to be sent to the Educational Department unfilled. Mr. Corkill gave some necessary information concerning the Adolescent Act.

One great evil exists—the promotion of pupils before they are prepared. He emphasized the importance of the pupil spending two years in the Fourth Book before trying entrance. Pupils put in that time to prepare a pupil in one year for entrance is often done at the expense of other classes and takes too much out of pupil and teacher alike.

Mr. Corkill read a communication from the Junior Red Cross re school nurse. He explained that the "Possible Attendance" Report should show the total number of days the pupil could have been at school. This is asked so that the school attendance of Ontario may be known in a truer light. To aid teachers in self-criticism, Mr. Corkill distributed circulars.

As delegate to the Imperial Conference of Teachers in Toronto, Mr. Corkill then gave his report. He said the conference would do much to promote mutual ignorance and to unite more closely the various parts of the empire. Teachers should teach Canadian history, not great days and help in every way to strengthen the bonds of empire. The teachers regretted that time did not permit of Mr. Corkill's giving the whole report.

Mr. G. A. Miller, M.A., B. Paed., Normal School, Ottawa, on rising to give his very interesting lecture on "Science in Relation to Other Subjects," commended the President's address, remarking it had only one fault, its brevity. He would like to have heard more as waste in the educationists as waste in trades. Referring to Mr. Corkill's report, he complimented the people of the town and country on doing their part in maintaining the unity of the empire, as was amply proven by the memorial erected in memory of their loss in the Great War.

Mr. Miller's address showed how a knowledge of science has effected history and how closely this study is co-related with almost all other subjects.

Mr. McLean was much pleased with the address and remarked on the rapt attention of the teachers.

The evening enertainment was well attended. After an instrumental solo by Miss Catherine Baird, the chairman, Mr. McLean, introduced the speaker of the evening, Prof. J. Mathieson, M.A., Queen's University, who gave an illustrated lecture on "Some Interesting Things in the Heavens." It proved a treat, for even the little folks were delighted, especially with the views.

This was followed by an instrumental solo by Miss B. Banghan, and a vocal solo by Miss Norma Shannon, who very kindly responded to an encore.

Friday morning session began with an instrumental solo, beautifully rendered by Miss Lenore Black.

After the discussion on Dental Inspection, it was moved by Miss Mitchell, seconded by Miss Allen, that some immediate provision

A Misquotation.

A very common misquotation, a contemporary notes, is "There are no snakes in Ireland." The reference is to Iceland and not to Ireland. It occurs in a book by Niel Horrebow, published at Copenhagen in 1758. The 72nd chapter, which, by the way, Dr. Johnston was able to repeat, consists of the sentence: "There are no snakes to be met with throughout the whole island."

Perhaps the most common Bible misquotation is "Money is the root of all evil." St. Paul said that "the love of money is the root," etc. Solomon is credited with "Spare the rod and spoil the child," which is from Butler's "Hudibras." "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," also imagined by many people to be Biblical, is to be found in Sterne's "Sentimental Journey," where it is a translation of an old French proverb.

PARLIAMENTARY LETTER

The developements of the past weeks have been such as to bring cheer to the hearts of Liberals all over the Dominion. Down in the Maratime Provinces, the Liberal chieftain and next Premier of Canada, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, is addressing immense audiences and getting splendid receptions. Starting at Sydney, Nova Scotia, and continuing through the whole of the provinces, every meeting place has been packed to the doors by people anxious to hear from the Liberal Chief and his lieutenants, and in every constituency visited the tale has been the same; one of constant growth of Liberal enthusiasm until it seems that there is hardly a chance for the Conservative candidates in any seat in the province.

In Colchester, Hon. E. B. McCurdy, is promised the time of his young life, and in Yarmouth and Clare, Where Hon. E. K. Spinney will run, there isn't a likihood of him being able to stand up against the sweep of Liberalism which is going through the Maritime Provinces like a prairie fire. Live candidates are being chosen in every constituency in the province and live local organizations are already at work leaving no stone unturned to have really strong local machines in order for the registering of the vote.

The Liberal chieftain is getting a wonderful reception at Sydney, where the Maritime campaign opened, four thousand people packed themselves, like sardines, into the curlers' rink, and another four thousand strove in vain for a chance to get in. So dense was the crowd about the doors that Ernest Lapointe, one of the speakers of the evening, had to climb through a window to get into the rink at all. And then, in this meeting, which if any, would have been the place for heckling and questions, there was not a murmur of anything but applause from the huge audience. Cheers greeted the leader and the other speakers as they took their places on the platform and as they rose to speak, and when Hon. Mr. King finished the applause was deafening. At New Glasgow two theatres were packed with people, some of whom had come seventy or eighty miles to hear the Liberal chieftan. At Windsor the drill shed was crowded, and at Bridgewater a huge rink was crammed to the doors with listeners, some of whom had come forty and fifty miles to attend.

Receptions have been held at every point along the route, and everywhere the Liberal chief is being acclaimed as the next Premier of the Dominion. Certainly, so far as Nova Scotia is concerned there is no question as to the result. Premier Murray, veteran of Liberalism in the province and in the Dominion, offered to bet Sam Jacobs, of Montreal, that Nova Scotia would return fewer Conservatives than did Ontario—and he made the only figuring on one or possibly two Quebec seats going to the government.

Hon. Mr. King has been keeping right after the Prime Minister. Rt. Hon. Mr. Meighen, in his Mystical address, has been on the defensive, challenging Mr. King to name one autrocratic act of which the government could be guilty. Mr. King's reply was as forceful as it was direct.

"It is not necessary for me to name any one action," said Mr. King, amid the cheers of his audience, "the whole record of the Meighen administration has been one of autocratic actions. In railway matters, merchant marine, in spending through estimates and expenditures, under closure, in spending public monies by order in council and then refusing information to parliament and people, and in scores of other ways, the Meighen Government has shown itself autocratic in its treatment of the people. Mr. Meighen's demand that the Liberal chieftain also name a combine which had been allowed to operate under the Meighen Government tariff policy, also brought a swift and sure rejoinder. "I do not need to name one" said Mr. King, "you all know them." But I will tell you what one man said who should have known what he was talking about." Then the Liberal leader read to his large audience at Bridgewater the letter of James Murdock to Sir Robert Borden, in which Mr. Murdock told of the efforts of himself, as a member of the Board of Commerce, to put an end to profiteering and price-fixing by combines, and of the efforts of members of the government to prevent any of their friends being hurt. Mr. Murdock, the Liberal leader reminded the audience had quit the Board of Commerce because he was unable to accomplish anything by remaining on it. He finally gave up the job in disgust, charging the government with doing all it could to prevent the Board of Commerce from taking action to prevent profiteering. And later the same James Murdock, one of the leaders of the Orangeism in Canada, had put out a statement to the Toronto Globe advising all labor men to avoid the group system of government and throw in their lot with and vote the Liberal Party, which he had found to be the best party for fighting the battles of the people against the profiteers and the interests.

Mr. Meighen continues to try and bunco the people into making the tariff the only issue in this election, while the people are equally persistent in demanding that Mr. Meighen "come clean" and give to the country an account of his stewardship. When the Premier goes through the Maritime Provinces, at least, he will find that the people have decided to have their say as to what shall be the issue and that they are demanding that the government stand or fall on its record—and there is no doubt that the government is about to fall, and fall hard.

This week sees the Liberal leader campaigning in Prince Edward Island where he is receiving the same enthusiastic receptions that have been tendered him all along the tour. And then, after the Island is visited the leader will tour New Brunswick and return to Ottawa, fresh and fit for his further tours of the country.

Mr. Meighen will receive a good reception here undoubtedly as is his due as Prime Minister, but he will find a much different spirit prevailing throughout the province than that which Hon. Mr. King was greeted.

Throughout the whole of the tour the Liberal leader has made a plea for unity of action for the betterment of Canada. Divercity is not an evil, he has shown his audiences, but while the forces of progress, which are known as Farmers, Labor or Liberals are all working to the same great end, the betterment of conditions for all the people of this great dominion there is not room for them to seek to attain their ends by dividing into groups. "The Liberal party is as big and broad as this great Dominion" declares Mr. King. "There is room in it for every section, every race, class and creed. Come then, let us unite in our fight against our common enemy striving altogether for the betterment of conditions in this great dominion, and let us sweep away the hatreds engendered by war and bring in their place good fellowship and love, making Canada a better and brighter place for all."

The new ministers in the Meighen cabinet are a constant source of wonder to the audiences throughout the Maritimes. The question, "Who are they?" is heard on every hand, and people are given to wonder how Meighen could expect support for a cabinet composed of men who have never done anything and have nothing to their credit, with the exception of the Premier himself. The public, "You don't know them, said Dr. Beland at Bridgewater," well, neither do we, and anyone else who wanted to be a minister for a couple of months, and they went in because they had nothing to lose any way, and in becoming the six honorary pallbearers of the Meighen party, they would get the title of "honourable" for a short time at least.

I SUFFERED FIVE YEARS

Finally Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Paris, Ont.—"For five years I suffered from pains caused by displacement of my organs and in my back, All of this time I was unfit for work and was taking different medicines that I thought were good. THAT 33RD GOT SOFT STORY.

How the Second Battalion Won Its Reputation.

Some few weeks ago, a number of Canadian papers including the Toronto dailies published an article referring to the arrest by the police of London, England, of one James Morton, alias Sol Morton, who it was stated had some few years ago been sent over from Pittsburg under pay of the German Imperial Government to enlist in the 33rd Battalion, C.E.F.

In the article referred to the enterprising reporter in order to "make copy" had resuscitated some of the statements published about this battalion during its training at London. These statements were subsequently proved to have been without foundation, either in regard to discipline or general efficiency. They did, however, for a time delay the departure of the battalion for England, but after an investigation by a "court of inquiry," composed of officers of high rank from General Headquarters at Ottawa, the guilt was placed where it belonged. The then Minister of Militia, after a minute and careful inspection of the battalion, in the presence of the Judge Advocate-General and other officers, commented them most highly on their general efficiency, saying in closing his address:

"I regret that this battalion has been detained so long in Canada through no fault of yours. No better battalion than the 33rd ever donned the tunic. You will, if possible, have your Christmas dinner in England."

This was in late November, 1915. On the following December they entrained for Quebec. On arrival in that city they were quartered, temporarily, or so it was intended, in the Immigration shed, but as no ocean transport could be obtained before close of navigation from that port, they were detained till March 15th. Notwithstanding the fact that at that time the shed had not been fitted for winter quarters, and the cold and discomforts caused much sickness, nevertheless they maintained their discipline and "Esprit de Corps" to a remarkable degree, as the following extracts from the leading city papers published on the eve of their departure for Halifax will show. The Chronicle, amongst many flattering things, said: 'It is a hard thing to live down a bad name, even if undeserved, but we are glad to say that the 33rd has done this, and now its members are as generally popular as those of any regiment that has passed through Quebec since the beginning of the war, which is saying a good deal."

The Telegraph said: "Their acts as a body, their friendliness in contact with all, and their willingness to help every good cause has completely reversed the unfavorable local opinions formed of them at the outset, and it is no exaggeration to say that from one of the most unpopular they have justly become one of the most popular corps who have passed through Quebec since the beginning of the war. In leaving us for the firing line they will take the sincere regrets of all our citizens as well as the warmest prayers for their safety. Another regiment in every respect will cross the seas to take part in the great struggle, and by no stouter or firmer hands will its banner be held and lustre added to the Canadian name."

This battalion was composed of real comrades, who stood up and lived down all evil reports in London and Quebec while hundreds of their officers and men now lie sleeping in France and Flanders. It surely argues like ingratitude, at this date, to harrow the feelings of their friends and relatives, who had almost equal hardships to endure, by republishing such stories and resurrecting half-forgotten incidents.

If the Imperial German Government paid this man to come over and enlist in the 33rd Battalion, as stated, they must have thought it worth while, but, like many other schemes, it failed ultimately in destroying its efficiency.

The private, who shot the Greek restaurateur in Quebec on New Year's Eve, was but a boy, so filled with the fighting spirit that he transferred from another unit to the 33rd on the eve of its departure from London. He was an American, with no previous misconduct marks against him, a great favorite with his comrades, and has since been granted a free pardon.

FOR FLETCHER'S
CASTORIA

LACROSSE AND THE IRISH.

A Strange Controversy That Raged Round the National Game.

One of the strangest controversies in the history of lacrosse raged for a considerable length of time about half a century ago, when some imaginative persons made a futile effort to connect the Irish and the Indians with lacrosse as the link between them.

It was shortly after lacross had been adopted as Canada's national game, and everybody was taking an interest in how it was played. It is recorded that the late Hon. Thomas D'Arcy McGee remarked shortly after seeing the first lacrosse stick, or the first "crosse," as it was called in those days that it bore a marked resemblance to the trundling stick used in the Irish game of Coman. It may be added that the Hon. D'Arcy McGee knew his Ireland thoroughly, for even though he was murdered later on by assassins, who were doing in their generation what the Friends of Irish Freedom are doing now, he was an Irishman through and through.

The Irish game of Coman, or trundling, has apparently become extinct, for I can find no reference to it in several standard books of pastimes, or in the dictionaries. But even the resemblance between the lacrosse stick and the trundling stick struck a number of other Irish-Canadians beside the Hon. Thomas D'Arcy McGee. In the 70's of the last century, some man wrote to a paper in Port Hope and launched the interesting theory that both the Irish and the Indians could trace their common ancestry back to the Phoenicians.

The arguments that he had advanced were not numerous. He recalled the ancient tale of how the Phoenicians sailed the seven seas in their cranky crafts. So little is known of their voyaging that if a man in Port Hope chose to think that they traveled as far as North America, who could contradict him? Of course, that small was all surmise.

But the man with the theory had one fact that he thought supported him. The Indians used the lacrosse stick and the Irish used the trundling stick. Surely they could not be so much alike if they had not descended from a common ancestor. It was quite obvious to him that the Phoenicians had taught both their Irish and their Indian children some game, which in course of time developed into Coman in Ireland and lacrosse in America.

There is no record as to which was the more offended, the Irish or the Indians, by this attempt to link up their races. Canada was a small country fifty years ago, and the discussion, started in Port Hope, spread to many parts of the Dominion. Because it was novel, it found its supporters.

The people who took the other side of the argument had plenty of hot shot for the theory. If the Irish and the Indians possessed a common ancestry, they asked, why is it that the only thing common to the two of them to survive should be a game? Why is it that there are no social customs or racial habits to show relationship? They also pointed out that there is no record of any game played by the Phoenicians that might be the common ancestor of lacrosse and Coman. Not even Christopher Columbus could have disputed more strenuously the claim that the Phoenicians were ahead of him in getting to America.

One of the leading authorities in lacrosse of those days brought the argument to an end. The lacrosse stick had developed greatly in his time, he said. The original "crosse" used by the primitive Indians was much more like a crook with the end bent into a ladle than like the modern lacrosse. He added that the "original crosse bore no more resemblance to a trundling bat than a cross-bow bears to a rifle."

So the discussion died out, and the theory was forgotten, like many another theory that would have been important if true.

One fact remains undisputed however. The Irish have a natural gift for lacrosse, whether they inherited it from the Phoenicians or not. From the great Hoobin, of the Montreal Shamrocks, down, there has been a long list of Irish-Canadian stars in the national game—Toronto Sunday World.

A ROMANTIC ISLAND.

British Colony Where Money Is Absolutely Unknown.

There is a tiny island in the South Atlantic Ocean where the inhabitants will not look at money.

During the whole of last year they had only $1.25 on the island, and that was picked up on the sands. If you could visit them and offer them your purse they would turn it aside with a curt "No, thanks."

These weird people live in a little British "Garden of Eden," nearly 2,000 miles from the rest of the world. Ships pass far out to sea, but only one British battleship stops to call once every year. For ten years they saw no ship, and knew not what was going on in the lands beyond their ocean. When the war was nearly over they learned all about it in one day — the day when the battleship called with newspapers and mails from England.

This lonliest island of British dominion is Tristan da Cunha. It is really a volcanic peak, rising some 8,000 feet above sea level in the middle of the ocean, midway between Cape Horn and South Africa, with St. Helena, where Napoleon was banished, the nearest inhabited land.

Hilaire Belloc's Weird Wail

HILAIRE BELLOC, from whom not much has been heard since the war, is of opinion that the British House of Commons is on the road to perdition, and he sees no way to save it. There has been quietly going on a revolution which has had the effect of changing the whole character of England, so that the Commons, which once represented what was best in the state, has ceased to do so. Britain is no longer an aristocratic state, using the word in its broadest sense. A house composed chiefly of squires and merchants is no longer representative of it. One of the reasons for this change is the gradual growth of the urban as compared with the rural population. The majority of Englishmen do not live in the country. They dwell in towns, and the industrial towns in the Midlands, he says, now give the tone to the whole country. They have lost entirely any trace or remnant of the traditions of the old aristocratic organization. London preserves it only here and there in scattered districts and groups of her seven million inhabitants.

The writer thus sets forth his case:

1. The thesis: The House of Commons was formed, by, and is essentially part of, an aristocratic England having ceased to be an aristocratic state, the House of Commons is ceasing to function.

2. The name "House of Commons" originally attached to something quite different from what we have known as the House of Commons for the last three centuries.

3. The institution we know as "the House of Commons" arose from the Reformation, and was inseparable from and created by aristocracy; for aristocracy was the main political product of the Reformation in England.

4. Parliaments must be oligarchies. Oligarchies only work as aristocracies. The aristocratic state demands aristocratic action and temper both in those who govern and in those who are governed. These are lost to both in modern England.

5. The aristocratic character of the state has broken down because the aristocratic temper has departed both from those who are governed and from those who govern. First as to those who govern: Their loss of aristocratic temper is evident in the condition to which the House of Commons has at last fallen.

6. The aristocratic spirit, which has quite disappeared from the House of Commons, is disappearing also in the governing class as a whole.

7. The aristocratic spirit is disappearing also from the governed.

8. The House of Commons cannot be reformed from within, for decaying institutions do not reform themselves. It cannot be reformed from without, for any such reformation in form would either destroy its sovereignty or leave it open to renewed corruption.

The House, therefore, would seem to be in a sorry plight. Mr. Belloc is not entirely without hope, but he says that something must be done immediately to prepare for the restoration that is bound to arise when the aristocratic state finally passes. Either there must be a return to monarchy, he says, or the formation of a new confederation of states upon this hemisphere, made up of most of the former divisions, and arranged upon some principle of equal representation and governed by one responsible central authority. In either event, he says, there should be a group of councils supporting whatever form of central executive may be decided upon. It is suggested that the councils should represent the Local Guild, the Trade Unions, the Medical Guild, the Educational Guild. Mr. Belloc's preference is for a monarch, but he says that he does not mean a king in the conventional sense. He explains, "I mean any man, woman, or child, but normally an adult man, in possession of his faculties, who is responsible ultimately to the Commonwealth for the general conduct and preservation of the Commonwealth at any moment." This monarchy would not be hereditary. We infer that the writer means by monarch something like the President of the United States.

Indeed, Mr. Belloc does not disguise his admiration for American political institutions, and says that in the United States is to be found at least a "partial monarchial principle."

Mr. Belloc says, "In any event, the determining factor will be popular patriotism. This has never waned in England or wherever on the globe are gathered any group of men and women speaking the English tongue. The capacity for constitutional thought and constitutional government is instinct in the race. The power of corporate organization is native to the Anglo-Saxon genius. Expressed in the form of patriotic devotion to the national interest, it is the one link that binds the present British Empire and the Old England of the Middle Ages together. It has been for a thousand years the solvent of the otherwise insolvable. It is not yet actively, or at least generally, in play as a definite force in the great English debate. The supreme effort of the World War called it so far in one direction that it is at present unready for an equal exertion in yet another."

An Old Love-Letter.

A love letter engraved on a brick lies in the British Museum. It is a proposal of marriage to an Egyptian princess, and is 3,500 years old.

"BIG NAVY" LEADER.

Sir William Bull Exerts Power for Stronger Policy.

Right Hon. Sir William Bull, M.P., is one of the leaders of the group in England which looks with least favor on proposals for a smaller navy. With the approach of the Washington conference his views are being put forth with increasing vigor and power. Sir William does not speak without familiarity with naval problems. For many years he was parliamentary secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty. He is known as a member of the "Big Navy" party.

A member of Parliament for Hammersmith since 1900, Sir William was Parliamentary Under Secretary to the Colonial Secretary, Walter Long, from 1904. It was during the Great War that he gained more intimate knowledge with naval affairs as parliamentary under secretary. He is prominent in the Conservative clubs and in London civic affairs, and is a member of a leading firm of solicitors. In 1918 he was made a privy councillor.

In a recent article Sir William urged that Britain must build more battleships to retain her supremacy on the seas. Thus he takes sides, not only against Disarmament, but also against advocates of substitution of airplanes and submarines for capital ships. He has a strong place in the inner councils of the Unionist party as parliamentary chairman of the Unionist business committee formed in 1915.

A Brigand of the Air.

He lives in India, and is called a kite-hawk. He is one of the most brazen thieves going, and for audacity beats Raffles into a cocked hat. Here is an instance of his method of working.

A little girl set off for school carrying her lunch in her hand. There came a whirring of wings as a huge brown bird dropped out of the sky. The little girl proceeded on her way crying, while the kite-hawk overhead enjoyed the feed his talons had snatched from her hand.

Notwithstanding their thieving propensities, these birds must not be killed, as they are the natural scavengers of India. However, our troops stationed in the country have a method of their own of dealing with the kite-hawks. A blanket spread on the ground, with a piece of meat thrown on to it, forms a trap.

A marauding bird sees the meat, makes a swoop for it, and tries to make off. But his sharp talons have entered the blanket, which lifts as he rises, and the soldiers who have been waiting seize the blanket and pull down and capture the bird.

A long strip of paper, dipped in paraffin, is then tied to his tail, ignited, and the bird released. Away he goes up into the sky with a flaming tail behind him. Beyond a slight singeing, no injury accrues to the bird. This idea is sometimes used at football matches, where birds are released with a burning strip attached to them to record each goal.

An old syce, subject to fits, was once sent to a track stables with a saddle, and on the way was seized with a fit. A native friend of the old man happening to pass along, and thinking to do him a kindness, took the saddle and delivered it to the barracks. On coming round, the old syce, finding the saddle gone, walked on to the barracks. An officer, knowing the saddle was safe, but pretending to be angry, asked the native where it was.

"Kite-hawk took him, sahib," was the amusing answer.

Purse-Opening Verses.

One of the best-known men in South Australia—Mr. Samuel Lunn, more popularly known as "Sammy" Lunn—is in London, England.

A spare, elderly figure, with a kindly face, he has a faculty for rhyming which found its most fruitful expression during the war, when he collected over $40,000 in Adelaide, where he lives, for various charities. His verses were an effective lever in opening the purses of those to whom he appealed.

Every Australian soldier who left or returned to Port Adelaide was personally met by "Sammy," and he wears a medallion presented to him by the Prince of Wales on behalf of the local branch of the Returned Sailors' and Soldiers' Imperial League of Australia.

His health becoming impaired, a substantial sum was subscribed to send him and his wife for a trip to England and France.

His itinerary includes Demanscourt, near Albert, which has been adopted by Adelaide, and for which he brought over a box of children's clothes and toy airplanes and boomerangs — the latter made by youngsters.

"I was born at Dover," he told an interviewer, "and went to Australia when I was ten years of age. This is my second trip to the home country."

Famous at Fourteen.

The inclusion in the Royal Academy exhibition in England of two drawings by Miss Eileen Soper, a girl of fifteen years of age, is a reminder that many of the greatest artists have distinguished themselves at a very early age.

Wilkie's "Blind Fiddler" was painted when the artist was only twenty-two; Millais had produced some of his most famous work, including "Ophelia" and "Autumn Leaves," before he was twenty-one; Holman Hunt painted "The Light of the World" when scarcely out of his teens.

Hoppner's "A Sleeping Venus" was painted at nineteen; and Sir Thomas Lawrence was in his fourteenth year when he painted the portrait of Mrs. Siddons as "Zara" which made him famous.

Indus, Ganges and Himalaya received the names they bear to-day in the ancient Vedic age.

Lewis Gun Was Refused by British War Office.

1,300,000 Purchased Later

THE Lewis gun, which did such yeoman service for the British forces in the war, and which many military experts aver will prove the basis of the long-looked-for automatic rifle, was offered to Germany prior to the war, according to a statement made in the British courts a few days ago, when the company which manufactured the guns during the war was being sued for $15,000,000 excess profits and income tax.

The inventor of the gun, Col. Lewis, a retired officer of the United States army, submitted the gun to the British War Office in 1912, and in 1913 submitted the gun to Germany, Austria, Italy, France and Russia as well. All of these powers, after placing small trial orders, reported unfavorably against the weapon. The peculiar feature is that in spite of the fact that British experts who had tried out the guns for the army and navy made adverse reports on it in December, 1913, the British Government early in 1914, commenced to place orders for the gun. Just before the outbreak of the war, orders were placed for five guns at $575 each, and on August 15, 1914, fifteen more were placed. Three days later another 15 were bought, and so on until up to September 15 of that year, 252 of these guns were bought. In November, 1915, the price for the guns was placed at $500 each, and during the war the British Government bought no less than $65,000,000 worth, thus proving that experts may often be very expert, but lack judgment and common sense.

Germany was even more stupid. The Huns turned down the guns entirely, and later in the war got out a clumsy automatic rifle contrivance which the Canadians called the "scatter gun." This gun fired a very small calibre bullet which was incapable of stopping a man unless it hit some vital spot. The Lewis gun, which used the regulation .303 ammunition, on the other hand, had a range of well over 2,000 yards and, because of this fact, was exceedingly deadly against massed formations and useful for emergency barrage purposes. The outstanding feature of the Lewis gun was its rapidity of fire, the fact that it was air-cooled, sufficiently light to be carried and operated by one man, and composed of a minimum number of loose parts. In 1916 the British army had two of these guns for each battalion. In 1918 there were two for each platoon, which, together with the headquarters' sections, made a total of approximately 45 Lewis guns per battalion.

'Ware Whistling Women.

Will all the boys who whistle near our offices please read this with care?

Of the many superstitions in connection with whistling, none is better known than that which Scottishes in colliery districts, where whistling in the mines is regarded with great disfavor.

In the Leicestershire mines, if whistling is heard, the miners will leave the pits rather than flout what they consider to be a sure portent of disaster.

The Arabs have a saying that after whistling it takes a man forty days to recover all the good his whistling Arab is, in fact, a rarity. Iceland is another country where whistling is taboo.

Natives of Cornwall will not tolerate whistling in many places, particularly in caverns and in mines. The Cornish fisherman will on no account allow a whistling woman aboard his boat. The superstition concerning "a whistling woman and a crowing hen" is nowhere regarded with greater respect than in Cornwall and Devon.

Too Old to Fight.

One hundred and thirteen old warships have just been sold by the Admiralty to a ship-breaking firm, and among the ships to be broken up are the Dreadnought, the Magnificent, the Dominion, and Mars.

There is something pathetic in the idea of these old sea warriors, once launched so proudly, being chopped up and torn apart for what they are worth—which is about fifty shillings per displacement ton. All the instruments, expensive fittings, and furniture are removed before the sale, and the hull is broken up for firewood, or else for remodelling in some other form.

The log you burn (when coal is short) may once have trembled beneath the feet of an admiral. The summer-house you propose in may once have been the mark of an enemy shell. The table on which you spill your ink may once have been dashed with ocean spray!

Still, the uses of peace are better than the uses of war, and it is good to know that many ex-soldiers will help to break up those 113 vessels.

A Footless Dancer.

A story of how perseverance overcame physical misfortune is brought to light by the arrival of the Andalusian dancers at the Russian Ballet.

Recently they gave "Cuadro Flamenco" for the first time in London, and a central figure was Senor Maria Vico, having lost both his feet, dances on his knees.

Senor Matte was formerly a matador, and a year or two ago he was gored by a bull so badly that his feet had to be amputated. But the glamor of his profession as well as the national love of dancing was so strong that he began to practice with wooden pads upon his knees, upon which he now walks almost entirely.

VISIONS OF DEATH.

Crippen and Roger Casement Dreamed of Avoiding Scaffold.

In the last week before the sentence of death was carried out on Field and Grey for the murder of Irene Munro at Epsom, England, Field, the younger prisoner, felt his position keenly. The thought of death on the scaffold troubled his waking moments so much, that for part of the time it rendered him incapable of performing even the simplest tasks, and for hours the unfortunate man was obliged to sit in his cell alone with his thoughts. His one relief was sleep, but soon this ceased to bring relief, for on six consecutive nights the unhappy man dreamed that he had been reprieved. The joy on his face as he awoke with the dream was fresh on his mind was so marked that it was noted by the warder in attendance. These dreams of respite seem common among occupants of the condemned cell. In prison Dr. Crippen had no illusions or delusions in the ordinary way, but more than once he was a victim to dreams that the sentence of death had been remitted. Most mocking of all, this dream came with greatest vividness on the night before his execution.

When the summons to get ready was conveyed to him, he received it with an incredulous stare. "Your joke is in poor taste," he exclaimed. The truth soon dawned upon him, however, and before the preparations was carried out he confessed that he could not go through with such an experience again. "It is adding to the sting of death to have these flattering tales of hope whispered in the night, only to be drowned in the morning by the noise of the carpenters erecting the scaffold."

The mocking dreams of Roger Casement, as he lay in Pentonville Prison awaiting the end, were concerned mostly with Ireland. Each morning brought to his mind some new hallucination about German troops landing in Ireland or some such event. Some of these Casement had no difficulty in recognizing as dreams, but in the end he found it hard to distinguish between dream and reality. He had to ask the warders to confirm or deny impressions left on his mind in his waking moments.

Pugs as Parsons.

There is a city in Australia which bears the name of a famous pugilist—Bendigo.

In middle-age Bendigo became an evangelist, and on more than one occasion he took off his black coat to give an interrupter something to think about.

John L. Sullivan, a former world's champion, followed Bendigo's example and became a preacher, whilst both Summers and O'Keefe are devoutly religious.

Viscount Selby is the descendant of a famous prize-fighter who deserted the ring for politics. His name was Gully; he made a fortune in the prize-ring and then became an M.P. His descendant, the late viscount, better known as Mr. Gully, was the Speaker of the House of Commons only a few years ago.

Bombardier Wells is a ridiculously proud father and an exemplary husband, and loves good pictures and plays. His friend, Carpentier, is a great lover of animals, whilst Joe Beckett has a passion for music and flowers.

Paying Rent With Pepper.

The Prince of Wales, paying a visit to his Duchy of Cornwall recently, had a fine reception.

One of the most interesting parts of his Journey came when he sampled a number of ancient customs that are still preserved in the West.

In many country districts the courts of the lords of the manor retain usages that once had a clear meaning, but have now become odd survivals. Cornwall and Devonshire are not behindhand in keeping up these quaint proceedings.

Thus the prince received at Launceston, in consideration of certain ancient privileges granted to tenants, a silver dish, a hundred shillings, and a pound of black pepper; a pair of greyhounds; a pair of gilt spurs; one pound of cumin; and a six-pronged ancient salmon spear—which was offered to him, with a bundle of wood carried on the shoulder, by a tenant ninety years old.

To each of these conformers to ancient custom the prince handed a white wand.

Lamb and His Sister.

The following story which appears in an old volume of "Leigh Hunt's Journal" throws an interesting light on Charles Lamb's beautiful relations with his stricken sister, Mary: L. and his sister were one evening supping at Mrs. M——'s. L. (with a little unwelcome assistance from another person) had made his way to the bottom of the second bottle of porter. "You really shall not have any more, Charles," said his sister. "Pray, Mrs. M——, don't give him any more." "You hear what your sister says, Mr. Lamb?" observed Mrs. M——, pouring out the remains of the porter (which were thick) into his glass. "She is a person of ocean capacity," said he; "we must listen to her. Try the next bottle, madame; for this is thick, and—Hospitality should run free to the last."

The Largest Landowner.

The new Australian knight, Sir Sidney Kidman, is a self-made man, and not only a public benefactor but the largest landholder in the Empire. He controls over 32,000,000 acres, which carry about a quarter of a million cattle and many thousand horses. He neither smokes, drinks, nor swears.

Such an example amongst the order of knights might confound Falstaff at the first blush, and convert him at the second.

New York city has more than 11,000 miles of paved streets.

Romance of Tattersall's.

Established in 1766, and Is Greatest Horse Mart

MENTION the name of Tattersall to the average Britisher, and he will at once think of horses.

But although Tattersall's has been associated intimately with Britain's great national sport for more than a hundred and fifty years, few people are aware of the great part played by the firm in the history of the turf.

"Tatt's" had its origin in 1766 with the arrival in London of a Yorkshire woolcomber, Richard Tattersall. He came to retrieve his fortune, which he had lost during the Jacobite rebellion. With the help of friends he acquired a lease of some property adjoining St. George's Hospital, and here he started a business for the sale of horses and hounds.

Richard Tattersall was born under a lucky star. He had not been in London long before the Duke of Kingston made him Master of the Horse, a post which brought him into frequent contact with the Prince Regent, Lord Bolingbroke, and Lord Somerville. He married Lord Somerville's granddaughter, and from that time his name was one that was conjured with among horse lovers and fanciers all over the kingdom.

Tattersall hobnobbed with oslers and stable hands as freely as he did with his more wealthy-placed patrons. One moment he would be seen chatting on terms of equality with George IV., a frequent visitor to his establishment, while the next would see him cracking a joke with a groom.

Of his friendship with George IV. many stories are told. Together they founded the Morning Post, a venture which caused them to lose many thousands of pounds.

Richard Tattersall was succeeded by his son, Edmund. The latter's son, although he, too, came a great athlete. Among other astonishing exploits he fought boxing matches in his invalid chair and won them, although some of his opponents were noted pugilists. He had numerous stirring adventures with highwaymen, from most of which he emerged with credit to himself, while his hunting experiences, including an extraordinary number of mishaps, would fill a volume.

To-day Tattersall's has an unrivalled position among Britain's oldest and greatest business houses. The Derby Sweepstakes alone on the centrum in the famous auction rooms in Knightsbrige has "knocked down" well over $5,000,000 worth of horses, many of them winners of great races.

One of these—Highflyer, bought by Richard Tattersall himself—sired no fewer than three Derby winners—Noble, Sir Peter Teazle, and Skyscraper. Highflyer was never beaten, and his offspring yielded in racing prizes a sum approaching $1,000,000. Two other famous horses which changed hands at "Tatt's" were Flying Fox, who realised $175,000, and Ormonde, who fetched $150,000.

The fact that Tattersall's occupies a different building to that on which it was founded may be ascribed to the gambling fever that pervaded the turf seventy years ago. When the lease of the Grosvenor property expired the then Marquis of Westminster declined to renew it on this account. It was by no means uncommon for $400,000 in bets to change hands at "Tait's" on settling days, while the Marquis of Hastings lost $500,000 on one race, ruining himself and bringing about his early death as a result of his folly.

Nowadays betting at Tattersall's is taboo, and the successors of the firm who desire to enter the racecourse ring named after their ancestor have to pay for the privilege like any other racegoers.

Speaker Loses Moustache.

Mr. J. H. Whitley, the new Speaker of the British House of Commons, has shaved off his moustache, thus following the general practice of habitual wig-wearers. Mr. Lowther, of course, has a full beard. The Speaker Gully was clean-shaven, while his predecessor (Mr. Speaker Peel) wore a beard, but shaved his upper lip. Previous to this, we are in the generation of whiskers.

A wing of the Palace of Westminster is at the disposal of the Speaker during the recess, free of rent, rates and taxes, and with coal and light "laid on." The Speaker is still entitled to receive a buck and a doe from the Master of the Royal Buckhounds, and the Clothworkers' Company send him, annually, "a generous width of the best broadcloth," of which, as one writer recently remarked, seeing that Mr. Whitley is in the spinning industry in Yorkshire, he should be a judge.

Zoo's Most Valuable Animals.

The rhinoceros shares with the hippopotamus the distinction of being the most valuable animal are at the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park, each being worth a thousand pounds. Giraffes when full grown are unavailable, the reason being that they cannot be transported owing to their necks being too high to pass through railway tunnels. Apart from the popular favorites at the Zoo, there are a number of rare creatures exhibited which, although they do not appeal to the casual visitor, are of considerable scientific value, their death being anxiously awaited by the authorities of various zoological institutions. The total value of the animals at present being exhibited in Regent's Park is estimated at approximately £20,000.

A pine tree in New Zealand is estimated to be 1,300 years old.

The National Crisis

"My appeal is to the whole people; to every man and woman who wants to do right by this country; to everyone who breathes the spirit of our fathers who founded this British Dominion."
—ARTHUR MEIGHEN

THE Election to be held December 6th will be the most momentous in Canadian history; for as men and women vote will depend the economic stability, the political stability and, indeed, the national stability of this country.

Today we find group striving against group, class against class, the industrial and financial structure of the country assailed by false and unsound doctrines and theories, while our great neighbour to the south has adopted a trade exclusion policy directed against Canada's vast agricultural interests.

The currencies of nearly every country in the world are depreciated. The Canadian dollar in the United States is subject to a heavy discount causing a loss of over one hundred million dollars in exchange annually.

Europe is overwhelmed with war debts—unemployment is acute—and the restoration to pre-war conditions is slow.

While Canada is in a much more favorable condition than many countries, yet there is evidence of stagnation, instability, unemployment and lack of confidence.

Taxes are heavy because of the country's efforts in the Great War, but have become burdensome on account of the misconceived policies and blunders of Governments that directed Canada's affairs prior to 1911.

These conditions are largely the direct aftermath of the war, but they must be dealt with fearlessly and constructively. This is no time to consider experimental changes, or the theories of visionaries.

This is no time for Crerar and his Free Trade policy.

This is no time for King and his wobbling "charted" policies, varying with each provincial boundary.

It is the time to cling to orderly, stable Government in the interest of all the people; to be guided by the experience of the past, proceeding upon lines that have been proven sound.

It is the time to place the destinies of Canada again in the hands of a Government led by a sane, courageous Canadian who has safely brought the country through the trying years of reconstruction, and upon whom we can rely to retain and initiate policies in the interest, not of a group or class but of all the people.

It is the time to support Arthur Meighen and his Candidates.

Meighen will lead us through

CHASED BRIDE AND GROOM

IN ORDER THAT PLANS FOR CHARIVARI WOULD NOT BE UPSET

"Where there is a will there is always a way," runs an old saw, and the truth of this old saying was shown in Kingston a few days ago.

A popular young couple got married and a number of their friends arranged for a right royal charivari, with a goodly supply of old boots, tin cans and confetti. The wedding was scheduled to take place at a certain hour, but in some mysterious manner the groom was tipped off to the "doings," and so he changed his plans. He had an interview with the minister, who had been engaged to tie the knot, and arranged for the happy event to take place four hours earlier than the time at first arranged for. The groom figured that this would give himself and his bride a chance to take a taxi to Napanee and thus give their friends the slip.

But the friends of the bridal couple were not to be put off in this manner. The wedding came off earlier than was expected and the bride and groom were being whisked off to Napanee before their friends got wise to the change of plans, but they were bound they would not be disappointed, so securing an auto they started out for Napanee too. On arrival at Napanee, the bride and groom registered at a local hotel, to await a train from the west, and their friends, on arrival in Napanee, did not have much trouble in locating them, and from that time until the train left for Toronto, with the happy couple, there was something doing every minute. The stock of confetti, old boots and tin cans which had been secured for the celebration in Kingston, did not go to waste in Napanee. Everything was used to good advantage, and all concerned had a great time, as the fun was taken good naturedly by the newly-married couple. And so all's well that ends well.—Whig.

BIG STRIKE IS CALLED

Men Will Walk Out on the U. S. Railroads.

Men Objected to Proposed Reduction of Wages, and About 2,000,000 Workers Will Be Involved—They Have Been Instructed to Leave Their Jobs on Oct. 30.—President Harding Must Act Quickly.

CHICAGO, Oct. 17.—More than half a million United States railroad men were Saturday night ordered to initiate a strike on Oct. 30, while other unions whose memberships bring the total to about 2,000,000, announced that the men were preparing to follow suit.

Details of the plan announced for the progressive national strike gave the Eastern States at least two days of grace before the proposed walkout would become effective in that region. The Pennsylvania and the Erie roads, included originally in the first group on which the strike was ordered, were removed from the list, thus excluding all the lines in states east of Chicago and north of the Ohio river.

The strike orders were issued to the Big Five Brotherhoods, oldest and most powerful of the railway unions, and they specifically included mail trains in the strike order. Their provisions instructed strikers to keep away from railroad property, with a warning that "violence of any nature will not be tolerated by the organizations."

The strike was announced following an overwhelming vote, said to be upwards of 90 per cent., favoring a strike because of a 12 per cent. wage reduction authorized by the United States Railroad Labor Board on July 1st, and after it was declared by the Association of Railroad Executives in session here on Saturday that a further reduction would be made at once by the railroads. It was said that the strike decision was made before the announcement of this further intended cut. Printed instructions for the conduct of the strike, issued in Chicago, were dated October 14th.

"I fear it will be one of the most serious strikes in American transportation history," said W. G. Lee, president of the Railroad Trainmen.

The country was divided into four groups, in which the men were authorized to walk out progressively, one group every 48 hours. Under this plan, with the men on the first Group No. 1 walking out Oct. 30, the strike would be in full effect Nov. 5.

The railroads listed in the first group on which the strike is to become effective touch 42 of the 48 states, with a trackage of 75,000 miles out of the total United States trackage of approximately 200,000 miles.

Kansas City, Southern, Missouri Pacific, St. Louis, Southwestern (Cotton Belt), International and Great Northern, Texas and Pacific, Southern Pacific (Atlantic System), including Houston east and west lines, Texas and Houston, (Texas Central), Southern Pacific (Pacific System), San Diego and Arizona, Chicago and Northwestern, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul (except Chicago, Terre Haute and Southeastern), Northern Pacific, Southern Railway (lines south of Potomac and Ohio rivers), Virginian Railroad, Chicago Great Western, Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific.

While no official information was forthcoming as to what group the Pennsylvania lines would be placed in, it was understood that they would be assigned to Group 3, on which the walkouts are scheduled to start Nov. 3. All walkouts are scheduled to begin at 6 a.m., standard time.

The transfer of the Pennsylvania lines from group 1 was unexplained by union leaders, but caused considerable surprise, as that road has been considered by the unions as the most antagonistic of any of them and it was believed that the first strike would be ordered on it.

The unions issuing the strike call were:

Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineemen; Order of Railway Conductors; Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; Switchmen's Union of North America.

The eleven other organizations, whose chiefs have been in session here, and who said unofficially that they will join the strike, are:

Sheet Metal Workers' International Alliance; International Association of Machinists; Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employes; Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen and Oilers; Brotherhood of Railway Signalmen of America; United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes and Railway Shop Laborers; Order of Railroad Telegraphers; Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America; International Brotherhood of Electric Workers; International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers of America; International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop Forgers and Helpers.

Railroad presidents and their subordinates were busy getting ready to meet the issue. Their plans, it was said, call for an effort to keep trains moving.

Union chiefs and the railroad executives assumed an attitude which indicated that they have a trump card to play. Another parley, brought about through efforts of President Harding and the Federal Railway Labor Wage Board would not be surprising.

British Woman Killed.

EDMONTON, Alta., Oct. 17.—Miss Ida Mcdill, who was sent to Canada by the British Government to investigate and report on the conditions under which British settlers were living on homesteads in the West, was knocked down and run over by an automobile at 7 o'clock Friday evening. She died at 11.30 o'clock in the General Hospital. Bert Warner, owner and driver of the car, was placed in custody shortly after Miss McDill's death, and will be held pending an investigation of the accident.

Smuts Unable to Attend.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—A Reuter despatch from Cape Town states it is now definitely announced in that city that, owing to Premier J. S. Smuts' preoccupation with the situation in South Africa, there is no possibility of his attending the Disarmament Conference at Washington, although inducements have not been lacking.

WOMAN THREW ACID.

Claims That Her Victim Ruined Her Husband.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Oct. 17.—A young Jewish woman, Mrs. Tora Sugarman, 24 years old, is being held at police headquarters, charged with throwing carbolic acid into the face of Max Berger. When the case came up, Berger appeared in court with his face completely swathed in bandages. He may lose his sight. The woman was remanded in custody to discover the exient of Berger's injuries.

According to the story of the woman, Berger and her husband were in partnership in a general store in Welland, and later in this city, and she alleges that through Berger's dealings they became bankrupt, losing every cent, while she claims Berger became wealthy. By accident she met him in a store, where, she says, he referred to their financial losses and taunted her about it, saying, "You will soon be starving for the want of even bread." Whereupon she threw a bottle of carbolic acid at him. She says she had purchased the acid some time previously in order to commit suicide, as she was so despondent over their financial losses.

She says she came from Europe six years ago, and after some time had saved enough to buy a home and had some money saved. Berger had told them to go to Welland, and they had sold their home and given Berger all their hard-earned savings. Berger, she says, gambled with the money away, and when they assigned, purchased the stock and had enriched himself on it.

TWO HUNTERS MISSING.

Upturned Canoe Points a Drowning Accident.

COCHRANE, Ont., Oct. 17.—Two hunters, Victor Geyssons and Eric Douglas Nicholson, are missing and believed to be drowned in Groundhog river, about forty miles west of Cochrane. Their upturned canoe was found two miles up from Paquette on the C. N. R., on Wednesday, with an axe on each end, but the paddles and rifles missing. It is believed the canoe came from Paquette, and drifted down to where found. The last seen of the hunters was on Tuesday, when they called at Paquier to pick up Oliver Hagen of Ottawa. Hagen arrived after they had started on a return trip to the camp, about 18 miles up the river.

Hagen went to the camp on Thursday after the empty canoe was found, but there was no trace of the hunters. One paddle remained in the eddy below the rapids. The water is high in Groundhog river, and there is a strong current. Hagen brought word to Cochrane Saturday.

Geyssons is an old country Frenchman, coming to Ottawa four years ago, and residing at Manchester street. Nicholson is from Shelburne County, Nova Scotia. Both were about 25 years old. They left Paquier on October 9th on a fortnight's hunting trip, and made camp up the river.

FLOUR MILL BURNED.

Town of Dresden Was Plunged In Darkness.

DRESDEN, Ont., Oct. 17. — The Lawrence and Wakefield flour mill, including 10,000 bushels of wheat in the elevator, was completely destroyed by fire which broke out about two o'clock Sunday morning. The loss is $75,000, well covered by insurance. The origin of the fire has not yet been determined.

During the fire the Hydro wires leading into the mill were burned off, and as a result the town was plunged in darkness and the pump at the station used for fire pressure purposes was put out of commission. It was half an hour before the gas engine auxiliary could be brought into service.

The mill had been operating night and day and was closed Saturday midnight for Sunday. At that time everything appeared to be in order.

This is the second time in two years Lawrence and Wakefield have been burned out. The last fire occurred in January, 1919, after which the mill of the Maple Leaf Milling Company was purchased.

Petition Referred Back.

BRANTFORD, Ont., Oct. 17.—In everyday parlance the British Government has passed the buck to the Canadian Government in connection with the petition of the Six Nations Indians in regard to their treaty and other rights within their own reserve here. Secretary Asa R. Hill, of the Six Nations Council, has received, through the Department for Indian Affairs, a copy of the letter from Rt. Hon. Winston S. Churchill, Secretary of State for the Colonies, to Lord Byng of Vimy. This letter notifies the Governor-General of the petition received from the Six Nations and passes it on with the comment that "His Majesty has been pleased to command that as the matters submitted in the petition lie within the exclusive competence of the Canadian Government, it should be referred to them."

Mines In English Channel.

PARIS, Oct. 17.—Mine sweepers have again been called into use in the English Channel and off the French coast, following repeated warnings that floating mines have been sighted off Cherbourg.

The Olympic is said to have missed one of the mines by a few yards.

CRUCIAL PHASE IS NEAR

Will Discuss Ulster in the Irish Peace Negotiations.

Status of Northern Parliament Will Be Taken Up—Several Week-end Disturbances Reported Ip Belfast —Widows of Men Murdered by Sinn Feiners Awarded Heavy Damages By the Courts.

DUBLIN, Oct. 17.—The crucial phase of the Irish negotiations in London will be reached this week when the status of the Ulster Parliament and the general principles for adjusting Northern and Southern Autonomy will be discussed. Sir James Craig, the Ulster Premier, and his colleagues will cross to England immediately, prepared to look after the interests of Ulster. It is learned that a meeting of Northern Unionists on Friday fully discussed their position and outlined plans for the guidance of Sir James Craig at the conference. It is not expected, however, that they will be called into the deliberations for the present, but Premier Lloyd George will see to it that British intermediaries keep Sir Craig and his Griffith group fully informed of the views of each.

Meanwhile general disorder in the York street district of Belfast on Saturday night closed a quiet week. Soon after nine o'clock more than a dozen shots were fired in a Nationalist quarter. Later another bomb was thrown in the same district, and still later the police found a man shot. In the first shooting a woman was seriously injured by three bullets and a man slightly wounded. Police held in reserve, together with soldiers, hurried to the scene in an armored car and prevented further shooting.

Nearby a bomb was exploded in the street an hour later, but there were no casualties. Police patrolling a lonely quay came upon a man shot in the thigh. He bled to death on the way to the hospital.

A number of threatening letters have been served on Protestants in Belfast, giving them 48 hours to quit their homes or be bombed.

Compensation for Irish Damage.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—It was announced Saturday night that the Athlone Assizes has awarded Lord Castlemaine £10,000 as compensation for the destruction of his residence, Moydrum Castle, by the Sinn Feiners on July 3.

Other awards are £10,000 for the widow of Major Compton Smith, who was captured by Sinn Feiners in April last while on a sketching expedition in Blarney district and was subsequently shot, and £9,000 for the widow of Brig.Gen. Lambert, who was shot while returning from a tennis party on June 20.

LIBERTY WAS SHORT.

Escaped Prisoners Robbed Theatre and Four Stores.

KENORA, Ont., Oct. 17. — Four prisoners, Elwood Tomlinson, Richard Roberts, Archie McKenzie and J. Gallivan, who escaped from the county jail here Friday night, were captured Saturday at Ingolf.

After their escape they are alleged to have broken into a local theatre, where they secured $20 from the till. The men then made for Dryden. Four stores there, the police state, were robbed of money and jewelry. They then boarded a train for the West, locking themselves in the kitchen of a tourist car. When the train stopped at Ingolf the four jumped from the window and made for the woods. The police were notified by a section-man, and as the quartette returned to the track they were arrested.

The Gold Seal Case.

OTTAWA, Oct. 17.—If the Supreme Court in its judgment on the Gold Seal Liquor Co. case, expected this week, decides in favor of the company, it will be tantamount to declaring the Canada Temperance Act ultra vires.

The Gold Seal Liquor Co. claimed that under the British North America Act any legislation tending to forbid the company shipping liquor from its Vancouver warehouses by the Dominion Express Co. to Calgary would be interfering with free and unobstructed interprovincial trade. If that contention is upheld, the doors of every province that has had a referendum on the question of importation and decided against it will be opened to all consignments of liquor intended for personal consumption, but not for sale, as provinces can regulate sale.

If the act be upheld, then the decision of the people of New Brunswick, who just voted against importation, and of the peoples of Ontario, Nova Scotia, Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, who voted against it previously, will be given effect.

Whichever way the judgment goes it will be appealed by the losing party to the Privy Council.

Scientists Big Chance.

LONDON, Eng., Oct. 17. — The British Launderers' Research Association has offered employment at the rate of $5,000 a week for a scientist who can reduce the high cost of laundry work. The trade has been losing money because the public cannot pay the high prices charged and a wizard is wanted who can reduce the costs.

Youth Loses Arm.

WINDSOR, Oct. 17. — Accidental discharge of a shotgun, due to a kick of his boot, resulted in the amputation of the left arm of Lawrence Laforet, aged 20. Sandwich, at the Hotel Dieu Saturday.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE

be made for Dental Inspection, etc., in our schools. Carried.

Misses Rockwell and McLaughlin, delegates on Northern Trip, gave very interesting reports. Their papers on Northern Ontario showed:

1. The advantage of learning geography first hand.

2. The progressive spirit of the people in every locality visited.

3. The wonderful possibilities of the country especially in the clay belt.

4. The grandeur of the scenery.

5. The high value placed on education.

6. The working of the mines and pulp mills.

7. That something should be done towards lessening the number of forest fires as they destroy enough pulpwood to run the largest pulp mill in the world ten years.

In every place visited, teachers were given an exceedingly cordial welcome, and answering questions and showing the teachers around were seemingly considered a pleasure.

The question of paying the expenses of such delegates came up. Dr. Miss Parke, seconded by Miss Hall, that we pay part of their expenses on account of the excellent reports given. Carried.

The executive was given power to deal with this matter, but the president explained that it should not be taken for granted that it is to be a habit as our finances are not in a very flourishing condition.

A motion to increase the fee to 50c. was vetoed.

Then came the keynote of Miss Dennee's address on the Trustee's Report of O.E.A. Service means success. She brought to the minds of those that the government is anxious to help the teachers. The hearty clapping of the hands showed their sincere appreciation of the teachers.

Mr. McLean said the teachers' motto should be "Service First Always: Pay Afterwards."

Miss Ruth Wilson's report on Queen's Summer School was equally well received.

Mr. Corkill pronounced both reports models, and Mr. McLean said Miss Wilson's showed the value of Summer Schools for raising the status of teachers.

Miss Baker of N.C.L. gave a model lesson in writing. She recommended a critic study in the Manual as it contains all the best instructions on teaching on this subject.

Mr. Miller's second lecture was on "Nature Study Methods and Materials." This subject is useful to the poorly educated as it involves observations which the teacher has not time to make. He dealt with it in such a way it becomes a mere study of form. It should be taught by direct contact with nature—a difficult thing for the teacher. Lead the child to gain knowledge through the senses. It is, as Whittier has put it, "Knowledge never learned of schools."

For eschewing books and tasks, Nature answers all he asks. Hand in hand with her he walks. Face to face with her he talks. Part and parcel of her joy."

Taught in this way, Nature Study becomes a delight, not a subject for examination.

When choosing proper material for a lesson, the teacher should choose what comes within the child's experience and that which arouses his sympathy for all forms of life. Teach something that will create in him love for the beautiful and inspire wonder—as the heavens. Study the whole life history where possible, as in the case of the frog, the butterfly and some plants.

Mr. Miller incidentally mentioned a book of great value in study of birds' notes, "Birds and Their Music" by E. Schuyler Mathews, for sale by a New York firm; price $2.50.

Mr. McLean tendered the hearty thanks of the Association for these excellent lectures, and the teachers expressed their appreciation by a hearty clapping of the hands.

The following officers were chosen:

President—Miss M. Mitchell.
Vice-Pres.—Miss J. Mair.
Sec.-Treas.—E. Harrison.

Members of the Executive—Messrs. McLean, Andrews and Trenouth, Misses Noble, and Dennee, and Mrs. Fairbairn.

Delegate to O.E.A.—Miss Lena Grozier.

The retiring president expressed his appreciation of the harmony in the work of this Association, also the pleasure and profit derived from the programme.

The new president, Miss Mitchell, congratulated Mr. McLean on the success of this meeting and tendered the thanks of the teachers for his help in making the convention such an unqualified success. Miss Mitchell thought this meeting should be a stimulus to better work, wished everyone a good year, and welcomed all the new teachers to our midst.

Miss Henderson's report from the Agricultural Schools included an outline of the day's work, the out-door work and sports, Social Evening and Trips. A course in O.A.C. is not only a great help, but gives universal pleasure to teachers.

Moved by Mr. Corkill, seconded by Mr. McLean, that all expenses of this meeting be paid. Carried.

Moved by Mr. Trenouth, seconded by Miss Mair, that a hearty vote of thanks be tendered to the trustees for the use of the N.C.I., and to all who so kindly assisted in the programme, or in any other way added to the pleasure or profit of this convention. Carried.

The meeting closed with "God Save the King."

Woman Gets Fortune.

NEW YORK, Oct. 17. — The will of Mrs. Edith J. Ellsworth, of 251 West 87th street, New York, who died on Oct. 8, leaving more than $200,000, leaves to each of her three daughters, one of whom is Mrs. Clara A. Flavelle, of Lindsay, Ont., $30,000 cash and her "daily prayer."

After having made the usual monetary bequests, including a contribution to the Port Hope, Ont., hospital, Mrs. Ellsworth said in her will:—

"Each of my daughters I leave to the care of their sisters, hoping they will always enjoy the love and advice of each other."

Abandon Time-honored Feast.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—Sheffield cutlers have abandoned their time-honored feast announced for Oct. 27. This decision is not surprising in view of the action of the Duke of York in withdrawing his acceptance of an invitation to attend, giving as his reason the widespread distress and hunger among the unemployed.

Nevertheless, regret prevails at the abandonment of an historic event which ranks as one of the principal social events of the country and, except during the war, has been held in unbroken succession for three centuries.

Wants Workingmen on League.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—Lord Robert Cecil, speaking at Hull, said he considered the great blot on the League of Nations was the fact that it contained no workingmen delegates. He emphasized the urgent need of Government control of the manufacture of arms in order to minimize incitements to war. He held that Germany's admission to membership in the League and, he believed, would have been admitted at the recent assembly if she had applied.

By Earl Derr Biggers

A deathly silence fell. Only a little traveling clock on the mantel was articulate.

"Absurd, ridiculous!" cried Lord Harrowby.

"Talk about impostors," cried George, his spirit and his courage sweeping back, "you're one yourself! I wish I'd got a good look at you sooner. I'd have put a stop to all this. Allan Harrowby, eh? I guess not. I guess I'd know my own brother if I saw him. I guess I know the Harrowby features. I give you twenty-four hours to get out of town, you blooming fraud!"

"The man's crazy," Allan Harrowby cried. "Raving mad. He's an impostor. This is a trick of his." He looked helplessly around the circle. In every face he saw doubt, questioning. "Good heavens, you're not going to listen to him? He's come here to prove that he's George Harrowby. Why doesn't he do it?"

"I'll do it." said George sweetly, "when I meet a real Harrowby. In the meantime I give you twenty-four hours to get out of town. You'd better go."

Victorious, George turned toward the door. Trimmer, lost between admiration and doubt, turned also.

"Take my advice," George proclaimed. "Make him prove who he is. That is the important point now. What does it matter to you who I am? Nothing. But it matters a lot about him. Make him prove that he's Allan Harrowby."

And with the imperious manner that he should have adopted on entering the

"Say," cried Trimmer in the hall, "is that on the level? Isn't he Allan Harrowby?"

"I should say not," said George grandly. "Doesn't look anything like Allan."

Trimmer chortled in glee.

"Great stuff," he cried. "I guess we bowed a bomb, eh? Now we'll run him out of town."

"Oh, no," said George. "We've done our work here. Let's go over to London now and see the pater."

"That we will," cried Trimmer—"that we will! By Gad, I'm proud of you today, Lord Harrowby!"

Inside Allan Harrowby's suit three pairs of questioning eyes were turned on that impressed nobleman. He fidgeted in his chair.

"I say," he pleaded, "it's all his bluff, you know."

"Maybe," said old Spencer Meyrick, rising. "But, Harrowby, or whatever your name is, there's altogether too much three ring circus about this wedding to suit me. My patience is exhausted, sir, clean exhausted. Things look queer to me—have right along. I'm more than inclined to believe what that fellow said."

"But, my dear sir, that chap is a rank impostor. There wasn't a word of truth in what he said. Cynthia, you understand"—

"Why, yes, I suppose so," the girl replied. "You are Allan Harrowby, aren't you?"

"My dear girl, of course I am."

"Nevertheless," said Spencer Meyrick, with decision, "I'm going to call the wedding off again. Some of your actions haven't made much of a hit with me. I'm going to call it off until you come to me and prove that you're Allan Harrowby, a lord in good and regular standing, with all dues paid."

"But—confound it, sir—a gentleman's word"—

"Mr. Meyrick," put in Minot, "may I be allowed to say that I consider your action hasty"—

"And may I be allowed to ask what affair this is of yours?" demanded Mr. Meyrick hotly.

"Father," cried Miss Meyrick, "please do not be harsh with Mr. Minot. His heart is absolutely set on my marriage with Lord Harrowby. Naturally he feels very badly over all this."

Minot winced.

"Come, Cynthia," said Meyrick, moving toward the door. "I've had enough of this play acting. Remember, sir, the wedding is off—absolutely off—until you are able to establish your identity beyond question."

And he and his daughter went out. Minot sat for a long time staring at Lord Harrowby. Finally he spoke.

"Say, Harrowby," he inquired, "who the devil are you?"

His lordship sadly shook his head.

"You, too, Brutus," he sighed. "Haven't I one friend left? I'm Allan Harrowby. Ask Jephson. If I weren't that policy that's causing you so much trouble wouldn't be worth the paper it's written on."

"That's right too. Well, admitting you're Harrowby, how are you going to prove it?"

"I've an idea," Harrowby replied.

"Everything comes to him who waits. What is it?"

"A very good friend of mine—an old Oxford friend—is attached to our embassy at Washington. He was planning to come down for the wedding. I'll telegraph him to board the next train."

"Good boy!" said Minot. "That's a regular idea. Better send the wire at once."

Harrowby promised, and they parted. Shortly after 6 o'clock a delayed telegram was delivered to Mr. Minot. It was from Mr. Thacker, and it read:

"Have located the owner of the yacht Lileth (its real name the Lady Evelyn, stolen from owner in North river. He is on his way south. Will look you up on arrival."

Minot whistled. Here was a new twist for the drama to take.

At about the same time Minot received his message a similar slip of yellow paper was put into the hands of Lord Harrowby. Three times he read it, his eyes staring, his cheeks flushed. Then he fled to his rooms. The elevator was not quick enough; he sped up the stairs. Once in his suit, he dragged out the nearest traveling bag and he ran to pack like a madman.

Mr. Minot was finishing a leisurely and lonely dinner about an hour later when Jack Paddock ran up to his table. Mr. Paddock's usual calm was sadly ruffled.

"Dick," he cried, "here's news for you. I met Lord Harrowby sliding out a side door with a suit case just now."

Minot leaped to his feet.

"What does that mean?" he wondered aloud.

"Mean?" answered Mr. Paddock. "It means just one thing. Old George had the right dope. Harrowby is a fake. He's making his getaway."

CHAPTER XIV.

The Shortest Way Home.

MINOT stood amid the colorful blooms of the hotel courtyard and looked up at her window, with its white curtain waving gently. He called softly. And then he saw her face peering out as some senorita of the old days from her lattice.

"I've news—very important news," he said. "May I see you a moment?"

She came, dressed in the white that set off so well her hair of gleaming copper. Minot met her on the veranda. She smiled into his eyes inquiringly.

"Do you mind—a little walk?" he asked.

"Where to?"

"Say to the fort—the longest way." She glanced back toward the hotel.

"I'm not sure that I ought"—

"But that will only make it the more exciting. Please! And I've news—real news."

The gray fort loomed in the moonlight like a historical novelist's dream. Its huge ironbound doors were locked for the night; its custodian home in the bosom of his family. Only its lower ramparts were left for the feet of romantic youth to tread.

Along these ramparts, close to the shimmering sea, Miss Meyrick and Minot walked. Truth to tell, it was not so very difficult to keep one's footing—but once the girl was forced to hold out an appealing hand.

"French heels are treacherous," she explained.

Minot took her hand, and for the first time knew the thrill that, encountered often on the printed page, he had mentally classed as "rubbish." Wisely she interrupted it:

"You said you had news?"

He had, but it was not so easy to impart as he had expected.

"Tell me," he said, "if it should turn out that what poor old George said this morning was a fact—that Allan Harrowby was an impostor—would you feel so very badly?"

She withdrew her hand.

"You have no right to ask that," she replied.

"Forgive me. Indeed I haven't. But I was moved to ask it for the reason that—what George said was evidently true. Allan Harrowby left suddenly for the north an hour ago."

The girl stood still, looking with wide eyes out over the sea.

"Left—for the north," she repeated. There was a long silence. At length she turned to Minot, a queer light in her eyes. "Of course you'll go after him and bring him back," she asked.

"No." Minot bowed his head. "I know I must have looked rather silly of late. But if you think I did the things I've done because I chose to—you're wrong. If you think I did them because I didn't love you—you're wrong too. Oh, I"—

"Mr. Minot!"

The water breaking on the ancient stones below seemed to be repeating "Sh—sh," but Minot paid no heed to the warning.

"I've cared for you," he went on, "ever since that morning on the train when we raced the razorbacks—ever since that wonderful ride over a God forsaken road that looked like heaven to me. And every time since that I've seen you I've known that I'd come to care more"—

"Weren't you overly chivalrous to a rival? Wouldn't what—what you are saying be more convincing if you had remained neutral?"

"I know. I can't explain it to you now. It's all over, anyway. It was horrible while it lasted, but it's over now. I'm never going to work again for your marriage to anybody—except one man. The man who is standing before you, who loves you—loves you"—

"If we were back on the train," she said, "and all that followed could be different—and Harrowby had never been—I might"—

"You might—yes?"

"I might not say what I'm going to say now, which is—hadn't we better return to the hotel?"

"I'm sorry," remarked Minot. "Sorry I had the bad taste to say what I have at this time—but if you knew and could understand—which you can't of course— Yes, let's go back to the hotel —the shortest way."

"Considering what you have told me of—Harrowby," she said, "I shall be leaving for the north soon. Will you look me up in New York?"

"Thank you," Minot said. "It will be a very great privilege."

Cynthia Meyrick entered the elevator, and out of sight in that gilded cage she smiled a twisted little smile.

Mr. Minot beheld Mr. Trimmer and his "proposition" basking in the limelight of the De la Pax and, feeling in no mood to listen to the publicity man's triumphant cackle, he hurried to the veranda. There he found a bellboy calling his name.

"Gen'leman to see you," the boy explained. He led the way back into the lobby and up to a tall athletic looking man with a ruddy, frank, attractive face.

The stranger held out his hand.

"Mr. Minot?" he asked. "How do you do, sir? I'm very glad to know you. Promised Thacker I'd look you up at once. Let's adjourn to the grill room. I'm the owner of the yacht in the harbor, which somebody has rechristened the Lileth."

"Yes—I thought so," Minot replied. "I'm mighty glad you've come. A Mr. Martin Wall has been posing as the owner just at present."

"So I learned from Thacker. Nervy lad, this Wall. I live in Chicago myself—left my boat—Lady Evelyn, I call her—in New York river for the winter in charge of a caretaker. This Wall, it seems, needed a boat for a month and took a fancy to mine."

The stranger leaned across the table. "In the meantime," he said, "I happen to be interested in another matter. What's all this talk about George Harrowby coming back to life?"

"Well, there's a chap here," Minot explained, "who claims to be the elder brother of Allan Harrowby. His cause is in the hands of an advertising expert named Trimmer."

"Yes. I saw a story in a Washington paper."

"This morning George Harrowby, so called, confronted Allan Harrowby and denounced Allan himself as a fraud."

The man from Chicago threw back his head, and a roar of unexpected laughter startled Mr. Minot's hearing.

"Good joke," said the stranger.

"No joke at all. George was right—at least, so it seems. Allan Harrowby cleared out this evening."

"Yes. So I was told by the clerk in there. Do you happen to know—er—Allan?"

"Yes. Very well indeed."

"But you don't know the reason he left?"

"Why," answered Minot, "I suppose because George Harrowby gave him twenty-four hours to get out of town."

Again the Chicago man laughed.

"That can't have been the reason," he said. "I happen to know."

"Just how," inquired Minot, "do you happen to know?"

"I fancy I neglected to introduce myself," he said. "I make automobiles in Chicago, and my name's George Harrowby."

"You—you"— Minot's head went round dizzily. "Oh, no," he said firmly. "I don't believe it."

The other's smile grew even broader. "Don't blame you a bit, my boy," he said. "Must have been a bit of a mix-up down here. Then, too, I don't look like an Englishman. Don't want to. I'm an American now, and I like it."

"You mean you're the real Lord Harrowby?"

"That's what I mean—take it slowly, Mr. Minot. I'm George, and if Allan ever gets his eyes on me I won't have to prove who I am. He'll know, the Chronic Constipation or insufficient action of the bowels is one of the great causes of disease. Some authorities even claim that Constipation cannot be permanently corrected. This is a great mistake, because here is the proof that constipation can be cured and the bowels made to act regularly and naturally.

"For years, I was troubled with Constipation, and had to take laxatives and purgatives all the time. If I neglected to take these, the bowels would refuse to do their work.

About two years ago, a friend advised me to try "Fruit-a-tives", which I did. The first box helped me so much that I obtained further supplies of the remedy and continued the treatment. After using about eight boxes, my bowels were able to perform their particular function without aid.

kid will. But, by the way, what I want now is to meet this chap who claims to be me—also his friend, Mr. Trimmer.

"Of course you do. I saw them out in the lobby a minute ago." Minot rose. "I'll bring them in. But—but"—

"What is it?"

"Oh, never mind. I believe you."

Trimmer and his proposition still adorned the lobby, puffed with pride and pomposness. Briefly Minot explained that a gentleman in the grill room desired to be introduced, and graciously the two followed after. The Chicago George Harrowby rose as he saw the group approach his table. Suddenly behind him Minot heard a voice:

"My God!" And the limp Englishman of the sandwich boards made a long, lean stride toward the door. Minot leaped after him and dragged him back.

"Here, Trimmer," he said, "your proposition has chilblains."

"What's the trouble?" Mr. Trimmer glared about him.

"Allow me," said Minot. "Sir—our leading vaudeville actor and his manager. Gentlemen—Mr. George Harrowby of Chicago."

"Sit down, boys," said Mr. Harrowby genially. He indicated a chair to Mr. Trimmer, but that gentleman stood, his eyes frozen to the face of his proposition. The Chicago man turned to that same proposition. "Brace up, Jenkins," he said. "Nobody will hurt you."

But Jenkins could not brace. He allowed Minot to deposit his limp body in a chair.

"I thought you was dead, sir," he mumbled.

"A common mistake," smiled George Harrowby. "My family has thought the same, and I've been too busy making automobiles to tell them differently. Mr. Trimmer, will you have a—what's the matter, man?"

For Mr. Trimmer was standing, purple, over his proposition.

"I want to see this straight," he said with assumed calm. "See here, you cringing cur—what does this mean?"

"I thought he was dead." murmured poor Jenkins in terror.

"You'll think the same about yourself in a minute—and you'll be right." Trimmer predicted.

"Come, come," said George Harrowby pacifically. "Sit down, Mr. Trimmer. Sit down and have a drink. Do you mean to say you didn't know Jenkins here was faking?"

"Of course I didn't," said Trimmer. He sat down on the extreme edge of a chair, as one who proposed to rise soon. "All this has got me going. I never went round in royal circles before, and I'm dizzy. I suppose you're the real Lord Harrowby?"

"To be quite correct, I am. Don't you believe it?"

"I can believe anything—when I look at him," said Trimmer, indicating the pitiable ex-claimant to the title. "Say, who is this Jenkins we hear so much about?"

"Jenkins was the son of my father's valet," George Harrowby explained. "He came to America with me. We parted suddenly on a ranch in southern Arizona."

"Everybody said you was dead," persisted Jenkins, as one who could not lose sight of that fact.

"Yes? And they gave you my letters and belongings, eh? So you thought you'd pose as me?"

"Yes, sir," confessed Jenkins humbly.

CHAPTER XV.

"A Rotten Bad Fit."

MINOT rose early on Monday morning and went for a walk along the beach. He had awakened in black despair, but the sun and the matutinal breeze elevated his spirits considerably. Where was Allan Harrowby? Gone, with his wedding little more than twenty-four hours away. He should not return—Minot thought. By his own act he would forfeit his claim on Jephson, and Minot would be free to—

To what? Before him in the morning glow the great gray fort rose to crush his hopes. There on those slanting ramparts she had smiled at his declaration—smiled and labeled him foolish. Well, foolish he must have seemed. But there was still hope. If only Allan Harrowby did not return.

The first man Minot saw when he returned to the lobby of the De la Pax was Allan Harrowby, his eyes tired with travel, handing over a suit case to an eager black boy.

What was the use? Listlessly Minot relinquished his last hope. He followed Harrowby and touched his arm.

"Good morning," he said drearily. "You gave us all quite a turn last night. We thought you'd taken the advice you got in the morning and cleared out for good."

"Well, hardly," Harrowby replied. "Come up to the room, old man. I'll explain there."

"Before we go up," replied Minot, "I want you to get Miss Meyrick on the phone and tell her you've returned. Yes—right away. You see—last night I rather misunderstood—I thought you weren't Allan Harrowby after all—and I'm afraid I gave Miss Meyrick a wrong impression."

"By gad—I should have told her I was going," Harrowby replied. "But I was so rattled, you know"—

He went into a booth. His brief talk ended, he and Minot entered the elevator. Once in his suit, Harrowby dropped wearily into a chair.

"Confound your stupid trains. I've been traveling for ages. Now, Minot, I'll tell you what carried me off. Yesterday afternoon I got a message from my brother George saying he was on his way here."

"Yes?"

"Seems he's alive and in business in Chicago. The news excited me a bit, old boy. I pictured George rushing in here, and the word spreading that I was not to be the Earl of Raybrook, after all. I'm frightfully fond of Miss Meyrick, and I want that wedding to take place tomorrow. Then, too, there's Jephson. Understand me—Cynthia is not marrying me for my title. I'd stake my life on that. But there's the father and Aunt Mary—and considering the number of times the old gentleman has forbidden the wedding already"—

"You saw it was up to you, for once."

"Exactly. So for my own sake—and Jephson's—I boarded a train for Jacksonville with the idea of meeting George's train there and coming on here with him. I was going to ask George not to make himself known for a couple of days. Then I proposed to tell Cynthia, and Cynthia only, of his existence. If she objected, all very well—but I'm sure she wouldn't. And I'm sure, too, that George would have done what I asked—he always was a bully chap. But—I missed him. These confounded trains—always late. Except when you want them to be. I dare say George is here by this time?"

"He is," Minot replied. "Came a few hours after you left. And by the way, I arranged a meeting for him with Trimmer and his proposition. The meeting ended in the night. It seems he was the son of an old servant of your father's—Jenkins by name."

"Surely! Surely that was Jenkins! I thought I'd seen the chap somewhere—couldn't quite recall. Well, at any rate, he's out of the way. Now, the thing to do is to see good old George at once"—

He rose to the telephone and got his brother's room.

"George!" A surprising note of affection crept into his lordship's voice. "George, old boy, this is Allen. I'm waiting for you in the lobby."

"Dear old chap," said his lordship, turning away from the telephone. "Twenty-three years since he has seen one of his own flesh and blood! Twenty-three years of wandering in this God forsaken country—I beg your pardon, Minot. I wonder what he'll say to me. I wonder what George will say after all those years."

Nervously Allan Harrowby walked the floor. In a moment the door opened, and the tall, blond Chicago man stood in the doorway. His blue eyes glowed. Without a word he came into the room and grasped the hand of his brother, then stood gazing as if he would never get enough.

And then George Harrowby spoke.

"Is that a new suit you have on, Allan?" he said huskily.

"Why—why—yes, George."

"I thought so. It's a rotten bad fit, Allan. A rotten bad fit."

Thus did George Harrowby greet the first of his kin he had seen in a quarter of a century. Thus did he give the lie to fiction and to Trimmer, writer of "fancy seeing you after all these years" stories.

He dropped his younger brother's hand and strode to the window. He looked out. The courtyard of the De la Pax was strangely misty even in the morning sunlight. Then he turned, smiling.

"I thought you'd come at me with the title," said George Harrowby, dropping into a chair. "Don't go, Mr. Minot—no secrets here. Allan, you and your wife must come out and see us. Got a wife myself—fine girl—she's from Marion, Ind. And I've got two of the liveliest little Americans you ever saw. Live in a little Chicago suburb—homey house, shady street, neighbors all from down country way.

"You are Lord Harrowby, the next Earl of Raybrook. Take the title, and God bless you."

"But, George," Allan objected, "legally you can't"—

"Don't worry, Allan," said the man from Chicago, "there's nothing we can't do in America, and do legally. How's this? I've always been intending to take out naturalization papers. I'll do it the minute I get back to Chicago—and then the title is yours. In the meantime, when you introduce me to your friends here, we'll just pretend I've taken them out already."

Allan Harrowby got up and laid his hand affectionately on his brother's shoulder.

"You're a brick, old boy," he said. "You always were. I'm glad you're to be here for the wedding. How did you happen to come?"

"That's right—you don't know, do you? I came in response to a telegram from Boyd's of New York."

"From—er—Boyd's?" asked Allan blankly.

"Yes, Allan. That yacht you came down here on didn't belong to Martin Wall. It belonged to me. He made away with it from North river because he happened to need it. Wall's a crook, my boy."

"The Lileth your ship! My word!"

He explained briefly how Wall had acquired Chain Lightning's collar and returned a duplicate of paste in its place. The elder Harrowby listened with serious face.

"It's no doubt the collar he was trailing you for, Allan," he said. "And that's how he came to need the yacht. But when finally he got his eager figers on those diamonds, poor old Wall must have had the shock of his life."

"How's that?"

"It wasn't Wall who had the duplicate made. It was—father—years ago, when I was still at home. He wanted money to bet, as usual—had the duplicate made—risked and lost."

"But," Allan objected, "he gave it to me to give to Miss Meyrick. Surely he wouldn't have done that"—

"My dear old boy. Eighty-two! Allan, the old boy must be a little childish by now—he forgot. I'm sure he forgot. That's the only view to take of it."

A silence fell. In a moment the elder brother said:

"Allan, I want you to assure me again that you're marrying because you love the girl—and for no other reason."

"Straight, George." Allan answered, and looked his brother in the eye.

"Good kid. There's nothing in the other kind of marriage—all unhappiness—all wrong. I was sure you must be on the level—but, you see, after Mr. Thacker, the insurance chap in New York, knew who I was and, that I wouldn't take the title, he told me about that fool policy you took out."

"No? Did he?"

"All about it. Sort of knocked me silly for a minute. But I remembered the Harrowby gambling streak—and if you love the girl and really want to marry her, I can't see any harm in the idea. However, I hope you lose out on the policy. Everything O. K. now? Nothing in the way?"

"Not a thing." Lord Harrowby replied. "Minot here has been a bully help—worked like mad to put the wedding through. I owe everything to him."

give her dinner and dance in Miss Meyrick's honor as near to the bright Florida stars as she could. On the top floor of the De la Pax was a private dining room, only partially inclosed. There in the open the newest society dances should rise to offend the soft southern sky.

Being a good general, the hostess was early on the scene, marshalling her forces. To her there came Cynthia Meyrick, radiant and lovely and wide eyed on the eve of her wedding.

"How sweet you look, Cynthia!" said the duchess graciously. "But, then, you long ago solved the problem of what becomes you."

"I have to look as sweet as I can," replied the girl wearily. "All the rest of my life I shall have to try and live up to the nobility."

She sighed.

"To think," remarked the duchess, bore over a great bowl of flowers, "that tomorrow night this time little Cynthia will be Lady Harrowby. I suppose you'll go to Rakedale Hall for part of the year at least?"

"I suppose so."

"I, too, have had my Rakedale Hall. Formal, Cynthia, dear, formal. Nothing but silly little hunts, silly little shoots. American men would die there. As for American women, nothing ever happens—the hedges bloom in neat little rows—the trees blossom—they're bare again. Cynthia, sometimes I've been in a state where I'd give ten years of my life just to hear the rattle of an elevated train."

She stood looking down at the girl, an all too evident pity in her eyes.

"It isn't all it might be, I fancy, marrying into the peerage," Cynthia said.

"My dear," said the duchess, "when you introduced that brother of Lord Harrowby's this afternoon—that big, splendid chap who said America looked better than a title to him—I should have thrown my arms about his neck and kissed him!" She came closer to the girl and stood looking down at her with infinite tenderness in her washed out eyes. "Wasn't there—any American boy, my dear?" she asked.

"I—I—hundreds of them," answered Cynthia Meyrick, trying to laugh.

The duchess turned away.

How to Restore Damaged Pastures.

Andrew Boss, veteran farm manager with the Minnesota Experiment Station, says such pastures can be saved to some extent by proper care. Where the acreage of pasture is sufficient and with a little to spare, many of the bare or thinner spots can be top dressed with good barnyard manure to advantage. The top dressing will protect the roots somewhat, and in the course of a month or two a decided improvement in quantity and quality of grass will be noted.

"It is good practice," says Mr. Boss, "to divide the pasture into two fields, if possible, and pasture alternate weeks, or for alternate longer periods, depending on the quantity of grass and the condition it is in. A part of the pasture should be allowed to make good growth and be held in reserve until the hot weather of July and August comes on. During the fly season it is difficult enough to keep stock in good condition even when they are on good pasture, and no pains should be spared to have at least one or two good pasture fields for this season."

Strawberry runners should be spaced as evenly as possible to secure an even row that will give the most fruit.

WHERE THE APPLE PAYS

Soil, Location and Transportation to be Considered.

It Helps to Be Near Cities — The Labor Question Still a Serious Problem — How to Restore Damaged Pastures.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

This question will be discussed under four heads: Climate, Soil, Labor and Transportation.

The Factor of Climate.

So far as climate is concerned apples can be grown commercially in any part of Old Ontario, south of a line drawn from Parry Sound to Ottawa; in fact, there are commercial orchards producing fruit at a profit considerably farther, north than this. Many people think of commercial apple orchards as being necessarily confined to the milder parts of the province, and to the lake districts, but the fact is worth emphasizing that we have varieties of apples suitable for commercial culture in every county of Old Ontario. The winter hardiness of the many varieties grown throughout Ontario is now very well established, and it is possible to select varieties which will be hardy for any district.

Late and Early Frosts.

The most serious climatic difficulty in the Province of Ontario is the occurrence of late frost in spring, and early frost in fall. Other difficulties of a climatic nature can be largely overcome by the selection of suitable varieties, or by careful discrimination with regard to soil, elevation, aspect, etc. It may be pointed out, however, that frosts are more common and more severe over large areas of flat country than where the topography is rolling or hilly. Large areas of some of the southern counties of Ontario are, therefore, more or less unsuited to commercial apple orcharding because of their flat character. A more rolling country is much to be preferred, so that orchards can be made safer from frost by the better air drainage afforded.

Suitable Soil In Every County.

So far as soils are concerned, it may be stated that there is an abundance of land in every country suitable for apple growing. Well drained land is essential for successful orcharding, and there is plenty of soil of this type to be had in almost every district.

Summing up soil and climate, it may be said that no province or state in North America has so large an area so favorable in soil and climate for apple growing as has the Province of Ontario. If this statement is true it becomes obvious that the present distribution of apple orchards in Ontario is dependent on other factors.

Most Profitable Near Cities.

Transportation is the most important factor having to do with the distribution of commercial apple orchards in Ontario. In other words the commercial apple orchards are located within reach of transportation facilities, and the better these facilities have been with relation to large cities and to the developing markets of the prairies the more rapid has been the development of commercial orcharding. A location near a large city may be desirable, but if better soil and climate are to be found at a distance, the most distant location is likely to be preferred, provided transportation facilities are good.

Some districts in Ontario possess excellent conditions of soils and climate, but are lacking in transportation facilities, and until facilities are available little development can take place in commercial orcharding.

The Labor Situation.

The labor situation for some years has been acute, but has become more normal during the present year. For commercial orchard operations on a sizable basis, it is necessary to be within reach of a temporary supply of labor for apple picking. Otherwise, it becomes necessary to build dwellings for men and their families so that a supply of labor may be always available.

The difficulties of the labor situation at picking time can be lessened considerably by the planting of varieties which ripen in succession, and by taking care to get the right proportion of each. A large area of one variety ripening at one time is extremely difficult to handle. — J. W. Crow, O. A. College, Guelph.

Best Time to Dehorn.

The Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture gives Western farmers the following advice when and how to dehorn their commercial cattle:

"All calves should be dehorned at from one day to two weeks old with caustic potash. This operation is simple. When the calf is three to four days old, clip the hair where the rudimentary horns or buttons later appear, and, with a stick of caustic acid, wrapped at one end to protect fingers, rub over the button until the skin becomes a little inflamed. A scab will appear in a few days, and further growth of the horn will cease. It is advisable to rub oil around the button to prevent the caustic acid spreading over too large an area.

"On two-year-olds and over use a dehorning clippers or saw. Be sure and dehorn close to the skull to prevent further growth of the horn, as stubs make cattle look staggy.

"Dehorning should be done in the spring or fall, or any time, providing the weather is moderately cool.

"When purchasing feeders on the central market, it will pay you to have them dehorned before leaving the yards."

The circular adds: "Thousands of dollars are lost annually by Saskatchewan stock-raisers alone owing to bruised carcasses caused by horned cattle. Dehorned cattle in carload lots sell from fifty cents to one dollar per hundred pounds higher than equally good horned cattle."

BUILDING THE GRANARY

Stregth and Convenience Should be Carefully Considered.

Reinforced Concrete Is Preferable to Timber — It Makes the Granary Safer From Rodents — Roguing Potatoes.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

No hard and fast rules can be laid down for the erection of a convenient and efficient granary. Each problem requires a knowledge of local conditions and requirements. Granaries, in the majority of cases, are built-in enclosures on the barn floor, and constructed with too little regard for strength, durability and convenience. These structures should be located immediately over the feed room, each bin having a chute with a controlling slide, or a canvas distributor to convey the grain to the hopper of the grinder; or, if the grain is intended for market, to a sack placed on the scales below the chute ready to receive it. To facilitate emptying the grain, the floor of the bins should be sloping.

Be Sure the Structure Has Sufficient Strength.

The important consideration in the construction of granaries and bins for loose grain is to be sure that the structure is designed with sufficient strength to prevent bulging of the sides and springing of the floor; for grain, owing to its enormous outward thrust, corresponding somewhat to that of water, has a tendency to burst the sides unless well braced or supported. Timber construction requires frequent repairs to prevent decay and general depreciation from use. It is always liable to climatic conditions. The boards will crack and shrink in the summer when the bins may be empty, and when the new grain is dumped into the bins an enormous quantity promptly disappears into the cracks and crevices and through mice holes, entailing considerable loss to the farmer, to the consumer and to the nation. Thousands of bushels of grain are, in this way, annually lost to the producers through sheer indifference to the condition of the granary. Yet this profitable waste may be easily remedied and made secure by lining the bins with sheet metal.

Good Concrete Improves With Age.

While there is an annual depreciation on a timber structure varying from four to eight per cent., concrete construction grows better as it grows old; hence concrete properly reinforced, is the ideal material for granaries, because it is both damp-proof and rat-proof, two very essential factors in the construction of granaries.

Concrete properly made to suit existing conditions, is absolutely impervious to moisture, and can be kept as dry as any structure of wood ever built. The experience of many farmers is that grain mature enough to be placed in storage will not spoil on contact with concrete, nor will corn mold, provided there is good ventilation and the roof is tight. To get rid of rats and mice destroy their nesting place and to this end concrete is pre-eminently the best material and is recommended for all farm structures.

Reinforced Concrete Pays.

Under average, present day, conditions a reinforced concrete granary may represent an additional outlay of about 25 per cent. over that required to construct of timber, but the high efficiency distinctive of concrete quickly offsets this increased initial cost. Concrete construction has many, in short, important advantages. The contents are safe from the depredations of rodents, is damp-proof, requires neither paint nor repairs, is fireproof, the grain is perfectly preserved under all conditions of climate and temperature, and the resulting structure is practically everlasting.—John Evans, O. A. College, Guelph.

Roguing Potatoes.

The average yield of potatoes per acre in the Province of Ontario for the past thirty-six years has been about one hundred and fifteen bushels. The yields vary greatly. In 1917 there were variations in Ontario from twenty-five or less up to seven hundred bushels per acre. People are realizing more and more that for high yields of potatoes conditions must be favorable. It is important to have good fertile soil well cultivated and to plant a liberal supply of seed of the best varieties at the proper time. Seed potatoes somewhat immature which have been produced in a cool climate, and which are comparatively free from disease, are apt to furnish seed of high quality. Even under these conditions it is well to carefully inspect the seed before planting and to thoroughly rogue the growing crop.

A potato field is rogued by removing the undesirable plants. A thorough roguing of the growing crop once or twice during the summer is one of the most effectual ways in ridding the field of a number of the potato diseases. This operation would also insure the immediate removal of the weak and unthrifty plants which are sure to produce undesirable seed. Potato growers sometimes go through their fields and remove all plants which are not true to type. When roguing is done with a double object of eradicating diseases and of purifying the variety decided advantages are sure to follow. Thorough roguing is one of the best methods of securing pure, healthy seed of high quality. — Dr. C. A. Zavitz, O. A. College, Guelph.

A Swedish Custom.

In Sweden it is a popular custom for a bride to fill her pockets with bread, which she hands to every one she meets on her way to church. Every piece she disposes of its supposed to avert a misfortune.

FINISHING COCKE L

It Does Not Pay to Raise and Sell Thin Chickens.

Wyandottes, Reds and Rocks Best for Fattening—Feed a Mixture of Ground Barley, Corn Meal, Ground Buckwheat and Shorts. Mixed With Sour Milk—Winter Rhubarb Growing.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The marketing of thin chickens is not conserving our meat supply, nor is it the most profitable method for the producers. Present prices of market poultry admits of the liberal use of feeds and the marketing of well-fleshed birds.

In most localities there is considerable variation in the prices paid for thin and finished chickens. The spread in prices varies from two to five cents per pound; in some instances much more. It can readily be seen that the producers' gain in price on the original weight of the bird should make a profit, above the cost of finishing, on the gain in weight.

Fatten the Heavier Breeds.

The best birds to flesh or fatten are those of the heavier breeds, such as Wyandottes, Reds and Rocks. The light breeds, such as Leghorns, seldom pay to fatten unless they are very thin in flesh.

The birds intended for fattening should be confined to a small pen or slatted coop. The process is not difficult if you will but pay attention to a few points that are essential.

Do not feed the birds for the first day they are shut up. You should give them something to drink, but it is best to give no feed. Then feed very lightly for two or three days, and gradually increase the ration, being very careful not to overfeed. We usually start chickens on very finely ground grain at the rate of three-quarters of an ounce of grain per feed to each bird, feeding twice daily. This can be increased gradually to two or three times this amount. Generally the most profitable gains are made during the first fourteen to sixteen days' feeding. Such birds will not be excessively fat, but should be fat enough to cook and eat well. Some markets demand a fatter bird.

The most profitable gains are made on birds weighing from three and one-half to four and one-half pounds when put up to fatten.

Feed the Grain Finely Ground.

The grains fed should be finely ground, and, if at all possible, should be mixed with sour milk. Mix the feed to a consistency of a pancake batter. The more milk the chicken will take the better bird you will have in the end. Milk appears to have no good substitute for fattening chickens. If you cannot get milk then add ten to fifteen per cent. of meat meal to the ration and mix with water. The addition of a little green food daily will help matters. Many people get better results by feeding a little salt. About one-half pound to one hundred pounds of dry grain is sufficient. This mixes best by being dissolved in water and adding a little at each feed. Be careful not to use too much.

The best grains available now are a mixture of ground barley, cornmeal, finely ground buckwheat, and shorts. Oats are good if part of the hull is sifted out, as are also ground brewers' grains. We have used with good results a mixture of two parts of ground barley, two parts cornmeal, and two parts shorts, mixed with twice the amount of sour milk. In general feed about one-third shorts and then whatever finely ground grains you may have about the farm.

Six Points Worth Remembering.

The birds must be healthy.

The coop should be clean and free from vermin.

Do not feed the first day.

Feed lightly the first few days.

Never leave feed before the birds for more than fifteen minutes. If it is not all consumed remove what is left.

If at all possible mix the ground grains with sour milk.—W. R. Graham, O. A. College, Guelph.

How Winter Rhubarb Is Produced.

In making a permanent business of rhubarb forcing, it is necessary, each year, to set out a new bed, as plants once forced are of no further value. In the spring large roots should be dug, split in one bud sections and replaced in rich moist ground. During the growing season they are kept cultivated and free from weeds. In the fall they are covered with manure. Next spring a second bed is planted as before. That fall a large part of the first bed is taken up, leaving sufficient to replant another bed the next spring. The roots are taken up the last thing in the fall before the hard freezing weather comes and are placed in piles in a shed where they can easily be got at during the winter but will remain frozen. About December 1st take in a sufficient number of roots, place these bud side up on the floor of a warm cellar—about 68° or 70° —and cover with an inch of sand. Be sure to fill in all interspaces. Keep this sand moist. About a week later the buds will begin to swell and in from four to six weeks, depending upon the heat of the room—the cooler the place the slower growth starts—you should have rhubarb ready for market. After these roots are exhausted throw them away and put in more. If a constant supply is required make a new bed every two or three weeks during the winter. Be sure to keep all light dimmed. Put burlap or brown paper over the windows to get the bright pink color so much desired.—A. H. MacLennan, Ontario Vegetable Specialist, Toronto.

Jaunty Styles.

Short coats, novelty trims and embroidery emphasize the fact that youthfulness is the desired spirit in coats and suits this spring. Along with the effect of jauntiness the designers have managed to retain the air of dignity so becoming to women of middle age. Sashes, leather belts, and even twisted metal girdles are being worn.

DEAR PEOPLE,—

We purpose taking for our text this period, "Sell Your Hammer and Buy a Horn." Our past lectures, besides being to us very profitable, have proved also to have annoyed one or two persons, namely, bums and stool pigeons. So accept our apologies if we seem to be blowing a little, and try us out and we will prove our words. We intend during the coming months to do a little profit sharing among our friends. Whilst visiting in Toronto and West it was our good fortune to become acquainted with leather dealers of a much larger standing than some of our competitors, and also to buy in markets more reasonable. By buying in large quantities we were able to purchase the best oak tanned leather at 17c. below ordinary market price. So as an inducement for you to try out this real good quality we intend to make a big reduction in the price of our shoe repairs, so take note of the following list and give us a trial to convince you we have the real goods.

Official notification of the withdrawal of John A. Kennedy, U.F.O. candidate in Frontenac county was received by A. E. Wolfe, secretary of the county, at 1 p.m. on Saturday. Mr. Kennedy had previously intimated that family considerations made it impossible for him to run. This was a great blow to the county organization, and the leaders have been badly upset by the loss of their candidate, whom it will be impossible to replace. There are other men willing to run, but the farmers think that none now in sight can give the U.F.O. the hopes for success they had in Mr. Kennedy.
